Q: When is the Torah read for a newborn? When a newborn is brought home for the first time, is the Torah read for him/her? If not, why not? A: It's not customary to say the first word after giving birth, so we do not read it. Nor should we start on Passover eve. A: The answer from @Yori is essentially correct, but there is one additional point to consider. When we learn in a shul (community or synagogue) we are all at the same level, so it is appropriate to read the shul's book for all of the children/adults. This is said so that everyone can see that they are benefiting from the reading of the Torah. Some shuls also start with the first word and say the entire book on Tisha B'Av. It really does seem that we all have an equal chance to hear this. This may even be stated in the codification of the mitzvah of tefillin. However, we do not learn the Torah in a family at the same level, so when the newborn is brought home there is no reason to say "the Torah reading should be read for him/her." When a new baby is born, it is appropriate for the mother to read the Torah for her child.

Harmony, health and the elderly. This paper is about the experience of an elderly person in a nursing home and her views on health in later life. The elderly express the view that aging is a natural phenomenon which is not easily reduced to a factual description. Nature, not the physician, is the main influence in the health of the elderly. These views are contrasted with those of a younger person's view, which is that health is closely connected with hygiene and health-prophylaxis.
